Celebrities Lend Their Voices to E. Walter Smith and his "Little Girl"

Hollywood stars and high society "movers and shakers" show their support for the hit song (duet), "Little Girl," that celebrates the magic and importance of father daughter relationships.

Atlanta, GA June 2007

Father's Day and the Wedding Season is upon us there is special magic in the air. It's the time of the year when fathers and their "little girls" begin to celebrate the beauty of their relationship and the memories that they have shared. Providing the "theme song" for these precious moments are international recording artist E. Walter Smith and teen diva, Hal Jackson Talented Teen winner and "Idol" sensation, Tatiana McConico. This beautiful duet titled, "Little Girl," <http://www.thelittlegirlsong.com> is the first song in recent times that showcases the portrayal of a father and daughter singing to each other about the memorable moments of their special relationship.

As an advisory board member of the recording industry's premier community service non-profit, "It's Cool To Be Smart" <http://www.itscooltobesmart.org>, Smith launched a community awareness campaign in support of the song and the need to celebrate the beauty and magic of the father/daughter relationship. In the wake of the Don Imus fiasco and the attack on hip-hop music, many national organizations, celebrities and influential notables have been looking for a "feel good" song that will help to heal the industry, create a new standard of decency and have a timeless message that the listening audience can embrace and Corporate America can exploit. "Little Girl" bridges the gap between the "Old School" and "hip-hop" generations and is being heralded as a musical solution that is a "breath of fresh air." The "Why I Love My Daddy" essay contest provides the canvas for "little girls" of all ages to share their stories, and for all biological and community fathers to be honored. <http://littlegirlsong.ewaltersmith.com/WhyILoveMyDaddyEssayContest/>
